Title: Sexual curiosity runs rampant among Bangladeshi youth, amidst a void of sex education

Curriculum Integration (CI):

Curriculum integration is an educational technique that aims to establish connections between various subjects and topics within the curriculum, as opposed to teaching them separately and practically. I am able to comprehend concepts better and develop transferable skills thanks to curriculum integration.The significance of the knowledge we are gaining and its relationship to the environment ourself. Our success in an increasingly complex and interconnected global society is facilitated by its reflection of the interconnectedness of knowledge in the real world.

Face-Negotiation Theory:

A communication theory called "face-negotiation theory" examines how people from various cultural backgrounds control and negotiate their "face," or self-image, in social situations. Their primary component is their "face," which stands for a person's reputation, dignity and public or private self-image-all of which people work to uphold, improve, or defend in a variety of social contexts.
My life has been enlightened by the mask-making project from the past few weeks, which forced me to reflect carefully and explore my innermost thoughts about my actual experiences. This theory taught me something practical.I discovered that because of our ingrained habit of memorization from childhood, we young people are still living in a bubble. It's time to break this pattern now.And finally, I express my thoughts through this mask.

CI Theme:

As we know that, ULAB Media Studies & Journalism Department organized "Desirable Difficulties" in this semester's CI theme. A learning process that is both realistically difficult and requires a satisfactory level of effort to solve is called desirable difficulty.Consider how it resembles a Rubic's cube. As a result, I have decided to write about sex education for my CI theme because I have noticed the wrong perspective on this topic in my personal and social life. In Bangladesh, young people are very curious about sex and lack access to sex education.
If I clarify, the current generation still believes or thinks that sex education is just about teaching people how to have sex. My concept is from the previous generation. That's not the real sex education, though.And a few of them continue to treat it as taboo.

Our Message:

Our message is that "Sex education is not a taboo thing, education might makes us educated but proper education can changes our perspectives and makes us a smart human being."

Some people, I have observed, still believe that sex education is just about learning how to have sex and different kinds of sex positions.In my private life, I overheard a friend confess to me that he was aware of positions concerning sex education. Some older people believe that discussing sex education entails having had sex already because they view it as taboo.In other words, my goal is to dispel their misconceptions.The foundation of real sex education is respect, consent, responsibility, mental and physical well-being, and hygiene.Thus, we ought to be aware of it.

Layout:

First of all, I've chosen to use various pigment shades to colour my mask in order to represent being an educated person—a man, a woman, or both.I tried to illustrate that people are still ignorant about sex education by wearing a blindfolded mask.They were ignorant of the truth about sex education.Then, I drew some organs and other symbols on the right side of the board to represent what real sex education should be. I also added the main message and a few brief notes on both sides. On the left side of the board, I showed the incorrect perspectives about sex education of the past and present, showing how curious they are to have sex without knowing it properly.

Painting and Installation:

The mask was painted using acrylic colour shades- Black ,White ,Pink ,Blue ,Yellow ,Green and Purple.Like all of the colour shades was used in this whole board. Firstly, I coloured the mask with white colour to set the other colours like rainbow colours perfectly then I colour the eyes with black colour to portrait the blindfold.And I also draw and painted a small flag of Bangladesh in the corner of the blindfold. At stage two, I draw some small objects to symbolize the sex education like brain with flowers in it which was pink, mensuration pad with blood I used white and red colour, vagina, sex symbols, ovulation, bulbs to symbolize as an idea and some short notes. At last, I splashed some white colour on the board to high lighted the whole subject.

Realization:

When all was said and done, we understood that our mask had effectively spread a strong message to both our audience and society at large. Our youth will now be more conscious of their presumptions and captivated by the prospect of acquiring correct knowledge via education. These could include programmes like sex education. If I had the chance to do it over, I would like to be able to visualise the incorrect viewpoints of the people more clearly. I also think that adding more objects would make it look better. Throughout the entire process, my greatest asset was my confidence in myself. My mental design was clearly visible on the mask board since I felt that our generation was still living in the wrong bubble and had personal experience with this topic.

Role of Individual Members:

For this mask-making project, we both tried to contribute equally. Unfortunately, my teammate was unable to participate in this entire process because she had a bike accident that resulted in a fractured hand. However, we're glad that this project is successfully completed and it is going to be exhibited in our permanent campus.

Faria Ahmed Oishi: Contributed to the report writing, brainstorming, decorating, mask designing, drawing and painting.

Tanjila Akter: Volunteered to use her face for the mask and financially contribute to provide accessories.

Conclusion:

We are portraying our current lifestyles and knowledge through this mask-making project and CI theme. In addition to trying to raise awareness, we dug up the entire situation that surrounds us. Our goal is to improve the world together, and we are thrilled to be a part of this process.
